CEDIA Expo 2014: Stereo Speakers

As usual, the focus at last week's 2014 CEDIA Expo in Denver was on home theater and home automation, but it was also the first North American appearance for several new stereo speakers that have either just hit the market or will be shipping within a few months. Some of these are intended just for stereo use; others are available with accompanying center and surround speakers and subwoofers for home theater.

I'm generally a fan of three-way bookshelf speakers, which is why I was so happy to see the new Bryston Mini A, shown at left. The Mini A is the smallest in the new A line, which also includes the A3, the A2 and the A1 (left to right).

So what's exciting about these rather ordinary looking box speakers?

Only that, based on my recent experience with the company's Middle T, they hold the potential for great sound!
